When I was working in rural Honduras as a volunteer, the government sent a group of engineers to map out the best path for an electrical line. One of the men, Pablo, fell obsessively in love with me.

The feelings were not mutual, not least because he was pathetically drunk whenever I saw him. He followed me everywhere, banging on my door asking where the American girl was when he couldn't find me.

Pablo decided to carry positive thinking to the extreme. He announced that we were getting married on Sunday and invited everyone to the wedding with the best food possible and a "luxury" music band. Unfortunately, nobody came to the church or the nuptial party. Not even the bride.

One month later a friend told me that Pablo was going to marry a girl from the Swedish volunteers, and he gave me an invitation from Pablo to go to the wedding...
