BEACHES OF MANY COLOURS

Close your eyes and imagine the perfect beach. It's probably sunny and peaceful, with beautiful blue water and golden sand. Now imagine the sand isn't gold – it's white, black, red or even green. Unusual? Yes. Real? Absolutely! Welcome to four of the most amazing beaches in the world.

The White

It's as white as snow, it's got the clearest water in the country and in the mornings, kangaroos visit it. What is it? It's Hyams Beach in New South Wales, Australia. According to Guinness World Records, Hyams Beach has got the whitest sand in the world. This is because the sand is 99% quartz – a white mineral.

The Black

The Lovina Beach coastal area on the island of Bali, Indonesia, is famous for its calm sea, tropical beaches and dolphins. But it's also famous for its amazing black sand. The sand comes from volcanic rock. It arrived on the beach as hot lava, but when it hit the cool ocean, the rock became a type of black sand.

The Red

Kaihalulu Beach on the island of Maui, Hawaii, is also called Red Sand Beach because of its incredible colour. The colour comes from the red hills around it – another result of hot lava. It isn't easy to find Kaihalulu Beach, but you won't be sorry for trying!

The Green

Papakolea Beach, or Green Sand Beach on the Big Island of Hawaii, is one of only three olive-green sand beaches in the world. The sand comes from a mineral with a very appropriate name, olivine. This mineral also forms a semi-precious stone called peridot. So if you ever visit Papakolea Beach, maybe you'll be lucky and find a peridot in the sand.
