GREY OWL

In 1935 a Canadian Indian arrived in England. He wore Indian clothes. His hair was long, like an Indian's, and he had an Indian strong face. He said: "I am a Canadian Indian, and my name is Grey Owl. I want to tell you about Indian life in Canada".

People listened to his talks. Grey Owl was a very good speaker. He knew everything about Indian life; and everyone enjoyed his talks. They learned a lot about Canada.

"Canada is a great and beautiful country" Grey Owl said. "It's a rich land of trees and rivers. The air is clean and cold".

He talked about the emptiness of northern Canada. He told stories about the animals and the birds. And, of course, he talked about his people, the Indians. Then, in 1938, Grey Owl died. People found and read his books and papers. At first they didn't understand. Then they knew the truth: Grey Owl's origin was not Canadian. His true name was Archie Belaney. He was not an Indian. He was an Englishman! His mother took him to Canada in 1910. Soon after that he began to live among the Indians.

He didn't tell the truth in England. But all his talks were true. He was a pioneer as he focused on humans' negative impact on nature. He said that humans needed to develop a respect for the natural world and encouraged people to love nature.
