Joanne Rowling was born in England, near Bristol, on 31 July 1965. When she was a child, she wanted to be a writer. She wrote her first book, Rabbit, at the age of six. Joanne studied French at Exeter University. After her graduation, she worked for Amnesty International.

At the age of thirty-five, when she was sitting on a delayed train travelling from Manchester to London, she had the idea of writing about Harry Potter and his magical world. That same year, her mother died after ten years of suffering multiple sclerosis.

In 1991, she moved to Portugal to teach English and she started writing her first Harry Potter novel, The Philosopher's Stone. She met her first husband, a journalist called Jorge Arantes. They got married in 1992. In 1993, they had a daughter called Jessica but they divorced that same year.

Joanne returned to the United Kingdom with her daughter. They lived in Edinburgh. She worked as a teacher and she continued writing the novel. Her financial situation was precarious until her book was published in June 1997. She used the name J.K. Rowling because she did not want readers to know that the author was a woman. In December 2006, she finished her seventh and final novel.

Now, she is a multimillionaire thanks to the worldwide popularity of Harry Potter series, selling millions of copies in sixty-five languages and the eight successful movies that recreate exceptionally well Potter's magical world. She lives in Edinburgh with her second husband, Neil Murray, a Scottish doctor she married in 2001. They have two children: David, born in 2003, and Mackenzie, born in 2005. She supports multiple sclerosis research and humanitarian organizations to help women, children and young people from poverty and social exclusion.

If you go to London, you can visit London's Warner Bros. Studios - The Making of Harry Potter. You can also walk the streets of London which are locations of the Harry Potter movies.
